1 READING. For each question (1-5), choose ● the correct answer.Travel writer

*Tim Greenwood lives in Oakland, USA. He has written about Cambodia, Thailand and India.
At the moment he is writing a book about Nepal.*

Tim, how did you start travelling?

We never travelled as a family, but when I was a teenager I saw movies like Lawrence of Arabia and they made me want to travel. I left college at the age of 21 and went to Europe alone. That trip didn't go well – I was too young and didn't know how to look after myself.

How did you start writing?

I've loved writing since I was ten – I've never wanted any other career. At 21, I wrote for my weekly college paper and then started writing travel articles. At first, none of the travel magazines I sent them to want to buy them, but that slowly changed. It took two or three years, I guess.

What do you find difficult about writing?

It is easy to spend all my time travelling and then not have time to open up my laptop and work! Also, it's hard to earn enough money. I'll never stop writing, but one day I may have to do a few hours a week teaching just to pay the bills.

What's the best thing about being a travel writer?

I get letters from young people who've read my books and articles and enjoy my work. I just love that!

One day in a poor country, a man went to a bread shop to buy some bread. There was a long queue and he spoke about to a woman at the front of the queue. 'Excuse me, how long ago have you been here?' 'Oh, for about four hours,' the woman replied. 'They told us the shop would open soon.' The man was in a hurry and decided not to ask the woman to help him. She looked very friendly. 'Would you mind if buying a loaf of bread for me?' he asked politely. 'I'm afraid we're only allowed to buy one loaf each,' the woman replied. This is crazy, thought the man. What a country! He decided to go to the presidential palace. He wanted to tell to the President what he thought of him. He got out his best suit, put it on and was walked to the palace. Outside the palace, he was asked by a policeman what he didn't wanted. 'I have come to speak to the President. Could you tell me where he is?' 'Certainly,' was replied the policeman. Join the queue over there. But I must to warn you – the people at the front have been waiting for weeks.
